

Argumentative Essay on Education

Getting an education is mandatory in developed countries, but most do not appreciate it enough. We should value our education highly and work hard because it is compulsory for many different reasons and adds significant value to our lives. There are many positive effects on education, but most of them fall under the two criteria to allow us to make personal progress and improve our chances of survival.

Reading gives us more than we could ever have. In addition to the evident skills and truths we learn, we learn self-control and motivation, punctuality, social skills, and much more. We also gain confidence and self-confidence by completing jobs and being commended for good work, and learning the good and the bad as we are punished for any wrongdoing from an early age. Teaching is shown to increase people's sense of self-worth, satisfaction in life, and overall happiness, so ultimately being a perfect person with a lot of joy is an outstanding educational achievement.

These improvements alone increase our chances in life and our ability to do the things we want to do, as the social skills we have acquired allow us to build good relationships, and all other skills will help when it comes to getting a job. There is, in a sense, a good relationship between the level of education people receive and the amount of money they earn. Educated people are less likely to be unemployed or to have less money to support their families. They may buy a lovely house in an excellent location, a nice car, and regular family vacations. Educated people are less likely to go to jail because they will be able to support their families without crime and are less likely to be violent as they can communicate better through language.

This ongoing research adds so many different skills to your repository that employment opportunities and earning potential also improve. No matter what level of education a person has, a good education will make him better than anyone with little or no education.

This is because of the marketing skills they have acquired. Literacy and basic mathematical skills are essential for independent living and working. Good communication skills and the ability to work with the team and independently are often the fundamental requirements of any job. These are developed in the education system through group projects and individual projects. All in all, education gives us the skills we need to enjoy a happy and successful life.
