

Essay on 'The Television'

Science has given us many things. Television is a wonderful gift of science for human beings. It is a media of entertainment. It is an improvement over the radio technology. It gives us audio as well as visual entertainment. It is a great source of knowledge and entertainment. It provides different types of programmes.

It is the best source of teaching. Lessons of different subjects are taught on television. The students of different subjects learn lessons with more interest on T.V. The science subject becomes interesting. The expert and experienced teachers are requested to deliver lectures.

Television keeps us in touch with the sports, and the latest happenings around the world. We can enjoy it to know about the life-styles of film stars and other prominent figures across the world.

Television is a great boon to the house wives. They get entertainment after they get bored while doing household chores.

Like all objects of science, television is a good servant but a bad master. Particularly children get trapped in its false charm and they watch it sometimes at the cost of their studies and sight.

Hence, television is a very wonderful gift of science for human beings. It increases our knowledge in different fields.
