Essay on An Indian Juggler

An Indian juggler is a common man. He goes from village to village and from town to town. He is an entertainer in the life of Indians. He has no fixed place where he can live. He moves from place to place. He stays in a village or town for two or three days. Then he leaves for some other place. Generally, he continues his four within a district

His appearance and dress are quite peculiar. He ties a big turban on his head. He keeps a beard. A kurta with long broad sleeves, a fat bag on his shoulder which has many things give him a peculiar appearance.

His method of showing tricks is wonderful. He moves his hands very cleverly at the time of giving his show. Our eyes cannot follow them. He is one against many.

Although the juggler shows wonderful tricks to so many people, yet his income is very small. He is a simple man and he cannot exploit people. So he fails to earn much.

A juggler does his work honestly. He pleases people. He thinks that others will please him for his service but he is mistaken.
