Introduction

The acquisition of technology is one of the most outstanding achievements in the world. It transforms all sectors and enables one to perform complex tasks. The influence of technology is reflected in the way a person thinks and acts in matters. It is noteworthy that the use of computers to perform various tasks has taken a heavy toll on a person. This means that we are entirely dependent on technology as a way of life. Therefore, there is a good chance that technology addiction has become commonplace. The level of computer use is alarming, and it is turning people into animals like zombies that are not sensitive to public health. Therefore, this discussion focuses on the influence of technology on the social individual.

A significant cause of road accidents today is cell phones while driving. It is also common to find a person focused on his cell phone while using dangerous equipment that requires total concentration. These activities are hazardous as when a person uses electronic devices such as a phone, he loses focus and becomes oblivious to the dangers of working equipment. It leads to hazards. These individual actions make them like zombies who do not value their lives.

Cohabitation is the foundation of humanity. Getting to know people close to a person helps people to help each other and solve problems in the neighbourhood, community, or nation. With the social media platform launch, people are losing interest in connecting with other people around them who can see and hear. The social media platform has kicked off a person's commitment to the area and killed a person's ability to help neighbours. The fact that it is common for people to live with their neighbours for more than five years without speaking to them indicates the negative influence of technology. It transforms man into a ruthless creature.

One quality that makes a person unique is thinking and solving local problems. With the introduction of social media, most people do not find their time to think and focus on dealing with real environmental issues. Instead, less time is spent dealing with real-world problems than social media. So this technology creates half-baked adults who can change the world for the better by thinking of solutions. It indicates the negative impact of technology on a man's ability to conceive.

In conclusion, there are many technological implications for the human environment. Without killing part of his life, one is ignorant of real nature. It is a factor that has led to many social ills, mainly due to the people's negligence in handling the real issues in their area. Thus, technology transforms humans into robots like zombies with no ability to think and deal with real-world problems. Therefore, the impact of technology must be controlled to feel the truth of the world.
